We trust the fair now being held for the benefit of the fund for the sisters of St Francis hospital will be abundantly successful. This is a public institution of which the city has been greatly in need. The fair is deserving of a liberal patronage.

The Baltimore American says that the position of the democratic party as reported through returning congressmen is about as follows. They are in favor of Cleveland because they would like to nominate some other man, but are afraid to say so until the rest of the offices have been distributed.

In Pennsylvania the prohibition party almost collapsed at the last election. Last year it polled 32,458 votes; this year it cast for state treasurer only 18,471 votes, and for judge of the supreme court only 16,921 votes—a loss of nearly 50 per cent in one year. This falling off is significant from the fact that the republican legislature in that state at its last session passed a stringent high license law. This law will diminish the evils of the liquor traffic at the same time that it reduces the burdens of the tax payers. The republicans of Pennsylvania presented a united front against the attempt to open the saloons on Sunday. This issue demoralized the prohibitionists, for many of them saw that by voting against the republican candidates and for their own ticket they were virtually aiding the democratic. They accordingly voted the republican ticket, and the result justified the sympathies of every true lawand order-loving citizen.

Col. J. McClure, editor of the Philadelphia Times, has lately visited Washington and has had several confidential talks with the president at and regarding the message to congress. He has been writing letters to the Times regarding the latest decision of the president on several questions of public importance. In speaking of tariff legislation Colonel McClure says:

There will be no attempt to frame a tariff bill or a bill relating internal taxation until there can be the fullest and freest conference of the representatives of all shades of conviction on the subject. There will be no attempt, made by any possible democratic authority in the house or out of it to revise the tariff on any other basis than the distinct recognition of protection to labor, and tariff revision will be approached on the broad theory of preserving the interests of all general productive industries, including the protection of the wages of labor against competitive industry at home.

If anything definite regarding probable tariff legislation can be gathered from this, Colonel McClure's reach is as wide as the ocean. It means free trade with incidental protection or incidental protection with free trade. It is added after the tariff plank in the democratic national platform of 1884, which Mr. Randall and Mr. Watterson both supported, the former declaring that it meant incidental protection and the latter declaring that it meant ultimate free trade. The tendency among democratic politicians seems to be to avoid an out and out position on the question and to evade the issue as they did in 1884.

The present crisis in France is the all absorbing topic among European politicians. The present unsettled state of French affairs clearly shows many weaknesses in the constitution of that country. Unless these defects are remedied there can be no stability in the republican government of France. The trouble with the constitution seems to be that it is too complex in its character. The government is divided into several departments, all of which are present acting independently of the other, with no harmony between them. The executive department is now at the mercy of the legislative body. It has been shown that the president must have a majority of the assembly behind him or else retire from his office at the dictation of his enemies. He must moreover have a cabinet acceptable to the assembly, and yet he can be left unsupported by the failure of this cabinet. Even a president when re-elected to do so. A vote, as it has been suggested that the different branches of congress and the president hold their offices for different terms, so that a president could not be elected by the same majority that elected his predecessor. Under the present system, however, the president is elected by the people, and the legislative bodies are elected by the people, and the latter are the direct creditors of Great Britain.

French High Life.

New York World.

M. Wilson Eyre in 1870, is the son of a canny Scot, who came to Philadelphia in search of wealth and reached Cape Fortune in the speculation connected with the establishment of a steel rail in the French metropolis. During the early part of his career the prospective millionaire lived in the most modest kind of living, and it was only in 1873, after he had lost the greater portion of his fortune and was obliged to dispose of his wife's dowry, that he began to lay the foundation of his future chances of commercial success by his marriage with Miss Peloose, then the reputed heiress of wealthy parents, who had considered it worth their while to turn his attention to politics. Elected to the state senate in 1870, he voted against the declaration of war in 1870, and in 1871 identified himself among the followers of M. Grevy, at that time president of the chamber. It was only natural that he should ally himself to the latter, as the relations which formerly existed between his sister Mme. Peloose and the apparently austere old statesman were matter of public report. The scandal was recalled to mind when, to the astonishment of everybody, in 1881, the marriage of Mlle. Alice Grevy with M. Daniel Wilson was announced, a union which it was openly asserted had been negotiated by the bridegroom's somewhat too enterprising sister. The bride was neither beautiful nor particularly clever, being known among her friends as "cette bessesse d'Alice" (that goose of an Alice) and had been, moreover, the heroine of an escapade which had caused considerable scandal in Paris at the time. In 1879 or 1880 she became secretly betrothed with the well-known operatic tenor Capoul that one night she made her way to his lodgings and on his return from the performance he found he established there. Considerably astonished, his surprise was transformed into apprehension when the only daughter of the president of the republic informed him that she was madly in love with him, that she intended to marry him, and that she had come for the purpose of being compromised by him in such a fashion that her father would be unable to refuse his consent to their union. Capoul, who is a clever man, immediately availed himself of the strange opportunity of the young lady's visit, and, dismissing her cab for the night, contrived to be found by her to the effect of her father, assuring him that no harm had been done.

It is needless to add that M. Wilson has been for years a model husband and that his current relations with the popular actress, Jane Hading, her official husband to the contrary notwithstanding, would not have been tolerated in any other country than France.

Old Judge Greer.

Denver Republican.

Ray Brooks's reference to the Custer county bar in his speech at the banquet on Monday evening suggested a story which is told of Judge Greer, who will be remembered by many of the old residents of Central City. It was in the days when Judge Greer was in the habit of riding around the country on horseback, and he was on one occasion riding through Boulder county, when he came to a cabin where a woman was living alone. Judge Greer called to her to know if she could keep him overnight, and she replied that she could if he would be satisfied with a pallet on the floor. He consented to stay, and the woman, who had been married but a few months, told him that her husband had gone to Denver to buy goods, and that he would be back in a few days. Judge Greer, who was a bachelor, was much pleased with the prospect of a visit from the husband, and he remained at the cabin for a week, but the husband did not return. Finally Judge Greer, who had become very much attached to the woman, would not leave, and in a few days he married her. Judge Greer was then elected to congress, and he went to Washington, taking his wife with him. He was there but a short time when he received a letter from the woman's husband, who had returned to Denver and found his wife gone. He wrote to Judge Greer, telling him that he had married his wife, and that he would like to have her back. Judge Greer wrote in reply that he had married the woman, but that he had done so in good faith, believing that her husband was dead, and that he would be glad to restore her to the care of her father, assuring him that no harm had been done.

miles up the gulch from Aspen, and they are not few in number, either. It is my belief that for at least twenty miles eastin from one, two and three miles apart are taking out good paying ore, and many who have heretofore only sought to do the required have commenced making preparations for the development work. This has been done to a great extent since the survey of the railroads that was the case before, as the ore [illegible] properties have large dumps and are in a financial state for shipping as soon as cars present offers and roads can be built from claim to the tracks."

"What are the recommendations of regard to the traveling public and work of visitors generally?"

"Accommodations are excellent, and resemble those of Leadville, but easily less. Hotel rooms are neat and sleeping apartments are furnished with linen. What impresses itself most is that the army of people of all grades, especially those who are in search of work to be had in the neighborhood of [illegible] I wish you will state, through the columns of your paper, that it would be far better for the many who are daily thinking of going to Aspen in search of employment that there is a very inferior time, for at the present the place is overrun with that class of people, a greater part of whom are idle. The cause of this is that the mines which are producing have got all the hands they want and those who are prospecting cannot be able to hire anybody, owing to the fact that they have no money and cannot pay any at the present time. do not need any. But in the spring the case will be different. It is expected that the camp will open up with a boom equal to that of any mining camp in the world. I will from time to time drop you a line after my return, and let you know how matters are progressing."

Jewels of New York Women.

New York Correspondence Washington Post.

New York women wear a great many jewels on appropriate occasions now-a-days, and it is easily seen what stones are favorites with individual society leaders. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt has magnificent gems, and is plainly partial to her solitaire diamonds. Mrs. Marshall O. Roberts delights in rubies and yellow diamonds. Mrs. Walter Onslow used to wear pearls, but since fashion began to smile so warmly on gems has shown an affection for emeralds. Mrs. Ogden Mills prefers turquoises and sapphires. Mrs. Townsend Burden's favorite jewels are rubies of the deepest and red hot type. Mrs. August Belmont's weakness is for laces, and next to them she is content with cut jet, which she prefers even to the diamonds which she sometimes wears. Miss Adele Grant is never overanxious to wear jewels—but likes pearls and onyx better than other stones. Miss Eleanor Winslow takes to diamonds, and plenty of them, at that. Mrs. M. Livingston often displays turquoise. Mrs. Orme Wilson likes a combination of pearls and turquoises, or black pearls, or strings of large pear-shaped pearls.

For the actresses, most of them change their gems to suit their whims. Clara Morris is fairly constant to rubies. Mrs. Langtry has a pet turquoise. Ada Rehan rather leans to sapphires, and Miss Modjeska invests heavily in diamonds, the finest she can get, as does Lotta when ever she has a good year. There is Fanny Davenport, who loves the popular gem superstition and carries two or three sweet opals for fair fortune always in her pocket. There is Mary Hardt, who will never be without cut steel of the handsome and dangerous sorts valued by the Italian nobility about her dress or the toilet articles that she employs. There is Edith Kingdon Gould, who is accumulating jewels rapidly and sets an especial value on the diamonds that she buys.

Murphy Mountain's Jewels.

The Lady Murphy Company Strike on a Fine Lead.

Denver Republican.

A supplement of the St. Elmo, Chaffee County Democrat, just received, contains information that the Lady Murphy Mining company has completed its tunnel of 1500 feet in length in Murphy mountain, in the Chalk Creek district, and struck its true fissure vein, 500 feet below the outcropping, with an average width of five feet ore body.

The Lady Murphy company was organized, according to the Democrat, early in the winter of 1887 through the indefatigable efforts of Colonel John G. Kelly, A. J. Sylvester of St. Louis, was made its president and T. T. Onderdonk as superintendent two of the ablest men that could have been selected for the undertaking. The property of the company consists of the Pioneer lode and its extension, the Mollie, situated on the north side of Murphy mountain. Considerable development work had been done on the Pioneer and some on the Mollie, showing that it was a good fissure vein and the extension of the Mary Murphy.

In the building of approximately 1500 feet of tunnel a distance of [illegible] 300 feet by a tunnel 1200 feet in length was commenced. The deep shoots were timbered, and the work pushed forward rapidly, and on the eighteenth of June the whistle blew and the drills commenced boring a magnificent tunnel through Murphy mountain. The tunnel is 7×8, and 8 feet per day, under favorable circumstances, was the distance calculated to be drawn. It was intended to reach the vein December 1 at the outside, and the prediction has been verified.

Such faith had the company in striking the vein that while the tunnel was being driven a substantial covered tramway 3000 feet long, ore houses, boarding houses, and office have been erected, and every convenience is now in readiness for the shipping of ore. It has been expected during the past two weeks that every blast would uncover the vein, the location of the same now seems to have been miscalculated sixty feet. Since Saturday last did the work, however, and over four feet of glittering mineral was exposed, and up to the hour of going to press, there is nothing known which will be [illegible] Of course the ore has not been tested but its appearance is spoken of highly by all who have looked at it.

Ted Mary Murphy and Pat Murphy mines are now producing mineral in largely paying quantities and the ore in sight in both is as large as in any mine in the world. By this tunneling enterprise, which had cost the Lady Murphy company $200,000, it has reached a vein which can be stoped along a lead of 1500 feet in length and from 400 to 700 feet high. The tramway will place the ore on the dump at the South Park railroad track.

In driving this tunnel as stated the company cut through three veins of great richness. The ore is about 11 per cent lead, 7 per cent copper, and the rest gold and silver in the ratio of [illegible] It is safely [illegible] that the ore will run from $80 to $100 per ton. The people of St. Elmo are greatly delighted at the strike which is sure to go forward increasing the prosperity of the camp. It may be regarded as the best strike of the year in Colorado.

Very little has been published concerning the Murphy mountain properties. The old man Murphy, from whom they take the name, sold the Mary Murphy in 1879 for $700, and it was then sold for $2750. Since then hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended on it and a million dollars in ore nearly taken out. The Pat Murphy mine was only opened last spring. The Lady Murphy company are confident that the property in the Mollie and Pioneer is as good as either.

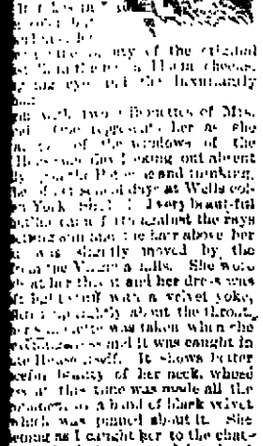
R SOCIETY QUEENS.

...ETTE PICTURES OF SOME WASHINGTON LADIES.

MRS. LAMAR WOMAN, and the understands. I am told, how to make her self as well as her husband. She has two pretty children and she is extremely popular at the White House.

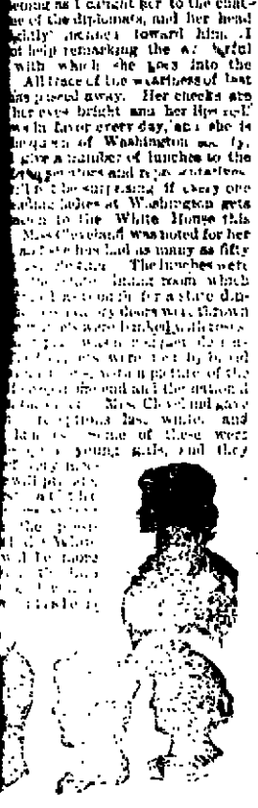
My next picture is a silhouette of the prettiest girl of Washington society, and if you could see her seated when my camera caught her in full evening dress with the exception of her beautiful neck and shoulders showing out like those of Venus de Medici, with her fair Grecian features above, you would, I doubt not, agree with this verdict. It is Miss Mamie Mitchell, the daughter of Senator John H. Mitchell, of Oregon, who, by the way, is a very handsome man himself. Miss Mitchell's father says he considers it as good as she is beautiful, and I doubt not he is correct. She was educated and talks elegantly French as well as she does English. She is now in Paris, but will be back for the Washington season, and I'll tell you whether she is as charming as I think she will be.



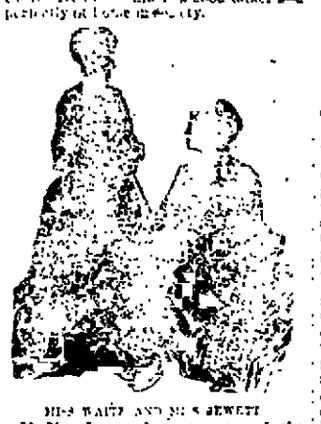
MISS MITCHELL.

The late Dr Alonzo Clark often spoke of a case in which he played an important part as Conkling's adviser in those days. Young Conkling, then but 27 years old, was engaged in the defense of a woman on trial for the murder of his wife. The theory of the defense was suicide. Dan Swinburne, of Albany, and Valentine Mott, of New York, had been engaged by the prosecution to give expert testimony. Conkling, in order to meet this successfully, sat up for two consecutive nights during the progress of the trial plying Dr. Clark with questions until he had completely mastered the subject of anatomy in his application to the case. The result before so heavily required he used with such telling effect in his cross-examination of the witness that the attorney general who was trying the case said he would relinquish the prosecution. The client was acquitted. In telling the story Dr. Clark would say: "Conkling is the most wonderful man in the world. He gained from me in two nights knowledge that it took me years to acquire."

As a conversationalist Mr Conkling is more brilliant than most. He speaks rapidly and forcibly, but without oratory. He is a remarkable talker. Reserved, he only speaks as he is called upon to defend himself about from all, but of politics, of men, of books and of women he converses with the greatest freedom. He is a powerful weapon. His opinions taken in connection with his high character are cannot be by his friends. Although he is a bachelor he is a favorite with the ladies. His present flame is the wife of the chancellor of the University of Mississippi at Oxford, a lady who is married to a prominent attorney at Memphis. Senator Lamar, whose name I have given you, has been a prominent feature of Washington society for a long time. She is a good talker and possessed of a beautiful mouth and crown of hair. She is also a good talker and possessed of a beautiful mouth and crown of hair.



MRS. LAMAR.



MISS WAITE AND HER SWEETY

If Miss Lamar becomes one of the belles of the season as many as there is now a strong prospect of, Senator Jeremiah Lamar will be one of the proudest girls of the Court Circle, and she will [illegible] with Miss Waite, the daughter of the chief justice a splendid Miss Waite is tall and fine looking. She has beautiful eyes, a clear cut intellectual face, and very charming manners. In the picture which I got of her she was standing before to finish J. Jewett's sketches, and the two make a very pretty group indeed.

The chief justice, by the way, will be 71 years old the latter part of this month, and is in the best physical condition. He has lived until he is well along in the eighties, and I am told that his own property amounts to about $1,000,000. Incidentally a fine estate for Miss Waite. Jerusha's first wife was a remarkable woman. She married, and she was a highly educated woman. One of her daughters is the wife of the chancellor of the University of Mississippi at Oxford, a lady who is married to a prominent attorney at Memphis. Senator Lamar, whose name I have given you, has been a prominent feature of Washington society for a long time. She is a good talker and possessed of a beautiful mouth and crown of hair. She is also a good talker and possessed of a beautiful mouth and crown of hair.

MRS. WAITE.

Chief Justice Waite is a native of Connecticut, and was born in the town of Lyme, in that state, in 1816. He graduated at Yale, and then studied law in Maumee City, Ohio, where he practiced his profession for many years. He was a member of the Ohio legislature in 1849, and was elected to the state senate in 1850. He was a delegate to the peace convention which met in Washington in 1861, and was a member of the Ohio constitutional convention in 1873. He was appointed chief justice of the United States by President Grant in 1874, and has held the office ever since. He is a man of fine presence, and is very popular with the members of the bar. He is a man of fine presence, and is very popular with the members of the bar.

ROSCOE CONKLING'S EVERY DAY LIFE.

The Ex-Senator Puts in His Time in a Round of Hard Work.

[Special Correspondence.]

New York, Nov. 24.—Perhaps the busiest man in New York city today is Roscoe Conkling. Finding himself highly [illegible] social life, devoting [illegible] exclusively to a legal practice which [illegible] an income of over $50,000 a year. In private life he is without [illegible], occupying apartments at No. 9 West Twenty-fourth street, a brown stone building, which [illegible] Hoffman house. Here he passes [illegible] strictly, and not unfrequently [illegible] at his writing desk, [illegible] knit. [illegible] concentrated upon solving some knotty [illegible] problem. He also might be aptly described as the word worker, and the [illegible] of [illegible] his dictionaries. Mr. Conkling has [illegible] of Webster's unabridged, which he has [illegible] to the time when he [illegible] please again enter public life, but from what may be gathered from his own words he has abandoned the arena of politics forever. Here [illegible] instead of [illegible] he ought to have [illegible] and of deference to the people [illegible] and [illegible] which was [illegible] and [illegible] right to the best [illegible] and [illegible] over his shoulder [illegible] through the windows. The attendants ranged through the woods and beat the bushes in all directions but Mr Brann was not to be found on the afternoon. It was said he had sunk into the earth and not a trace of him was to be found by either dogs or men.

The commissioners of Grand county are going to build a bridge over the Grand river in Hot Sulphur Springs, known as the Short Ride. Another bridge over the same stream is talked of near Red Mountain in the same county.
